Crime at New Low

WASHINGTON | Violent and property crimes in the United States dipped in 2002 to their lowest levels since records started being compiled 30 years ago, and have dropped more than 50 percent in the past decade, the Justice Department reported Sunday.

The annual survey by the Bureau of Justice Statistics identified about 23 million crime victims last year. The rate of violent crimes — rapes, robberies and assaults — was about 23 victims for every 1,000 U.S. residents 12 or older last year. That compares with 25 victims per 1,000 in 2001 and 50 in 1993.

For property crimes such as burglary and car theft, the rate was 159 crimes per 1,000 last year, down from 167 the previous year and 319 in 1993.

The study examined property and violent crimes except murder, which is measured separately by the FBI. Preliminary FBI statistics for 2002 released in June reported a 0.8 percentage point rise in the murder rate compared with 2001.

Experts say a number of factors have driven the crime rate down, including a more mature, less violent illegal drug trade, a drop in gang membership and even improved home locks and alarms that deter would-be burglars. CURT ANDERSON (AP)

Bremer: No More U.S. Troops

WASHINGTON | Faced with rising numbers of attacks, sabotage and foreign terrorists, U.S. officials on Sunday rejected sending more American troops to stabilize Iraq but said they would welcome additional help from other countries.

Better intelligence and cooperation from the Iraqi people are key to reversing the tide of violence, said L. Paul Bremer, the top U.S. civilian official in Iraq.

Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the United States would welcome a bigger international presence, but deferred to diplomats on the thorny question of whether some military control should be handed over to the United Nations.

Questions about U.S. troop strength in Iraq have heightened since the truck bombing of U.N. headquarters in Baghdad last week that killed the United Nations' top envoy along with at least 23 other U.N. workers. (AP)

Bundle Up: Almanac Predicts Tough Winter

LEWISTON, MAINE | The newest edition of the Farmers' Almanac hits the streets Tuesday, predicting a cold winter with plenty of snow.

Storms will target much of the eastern half of the country, with no letup until early spring, it says. The West also faces a cold, snowy winter. Bucking the trend is the Southeast, where mild weather is predicted. The National Weather Service doubts such long-term forecasts, but the almanac claims to get it right about 80 percent of the time. One Man's Trash

A man in Phoenix has achieved what some garage sale and auction-goers only dream of. Neil King, 40, spent $75 on the contents of a broken-down trailer filled with garbage bags of what appeared to be ordinary junk at a public storage auction two weeks ago. Among the mess, King found artwork by the Flagg family, a group of Scottsdale, Ariz., artists, that could be worth $1 million. "This is like winning the lottery," King, a certified appraiser, said. "This will never happen again." (AP)

It's a Small World After All

A chance meeting with a childhood friend proved inauspicious for Misty Quackenbush of Cortez, Texas. Quackenbush was supposed to have been sentenced to prison July 11 for drug distribution. But instead, she allegedly faked her own death and left town, police say. Four weeks later, Quackenbush was about 600 miles away from Cortez when she ran into old friend Brandon Brown, who's now a sheriff's deputy. She was sentenced Friday to five years — four for her drug charge and another for skipping town. (AP)

As of Friday, Quan was back in intensive care. (AP)

PHOENIX
Gas Pumping Resumes

Relief is on the way for gasoline-parched Phoenix. A pipeline that broke, creating gas shortages and fueling frustrations at the pumps for days, was up and running again Sunday. Officials at Kinder Morgan Energy Partners, the company that owns the pipeline, said they began pumping gas using a seven-mile bypass to circumvent the rupture point. However, they cautioned it would take a few days for the gas to reach there from Tucson. The trouble started when the east line, which normally supplies about a third of the Phoenix area's gas, ruptured due to corrosion July 30. (AP)

Eight Firefighters Killed In Collision With Truck

A van full of firefighters collided with a tractor-trailer and exploded in flames Sunday, killing all eight inside and injuring the two people in the truck. The contract firefighters, all under the age of 23, were returning home to Oregon from an Idaho wildfire late Sunday morning, when the van crashed on a remote eastern Oregon highway about 15 miles west of Vale, Malheur County Sheriff Andy Bentz said. Their names were not immediately available.

Before Sunday, 19 firefighters assigned to wildfires had died on duty this year, according to a spokeswoman for the National Interagency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho. (AP)

State GOP Breaks With Republican Gov. on Tax Hike

Verizon, Unions Near Agreement

Progress in recent days of negotiations described as significant

WASHINGTON | Verizon Communications and its unions were nearing an agreement Sunday as 78,000 East Coast telephone operators and technicians entered a fourth week on the job without contracts.

Negotiators had made significant progress at the bargaining table over the past several days — enough that the end appeared within reach.

Candice Johnson, spokeswoman for the Communications Workers of America, said talks centered Sunday on "a few remaining issues," but declined to say what they were.

Johnson cautioned that negotiators may need more time to strike a deal.

The union also was preparing to open its annual convention Monday in Chicago.

A Verizon spokesman, Daniel Diaz Zapata, said only that "the process continues and I have no new developments."

Still, the tone was a stark turnaround from last week, when both sides sparred publicly over efforts to gain a public relations advantage.

CWA sued Verizon and two executives after they listened in to the union's conference call with reporters about plans to urge the public to switch carriers.

Verizon had complained that a union official violated a previously negotiated cease-fire by using the slogan "Can you hear me now?" in the conference call.

CWA, along with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, has been negotiating with Verizon since June. Government mediators joined the talks to successfully avert a strike planned for Aug. 3 that could have affected service from Virginia to Maine. LEIGH STROPE (AP)

Defrocked Priest Likely Strangled

Autopsy on body of John Geoghan scheduled for Monday

BOSTON | Long before the public became aware of former priest John Geoghan, clergy sex abuse had cast a shadow over the Roman Catholic Church with claims of molestation and rape, multimillion-dollar settlements and exhaustive publicity.

But it was the case of Geoghan, who allegedly abused nearly 150 young boys over more than three decades, that shook the foundations of the church in the United States.

Geoghan, 68, was killed by another inmate Saturday at the Souza-Baranowski Corrections Center where he was serving a nine to 10-year sentence for assault and battery on a 10-year-old boy.

Attorney John Conte said Geoghan appeared to have been strangled, though an autopsy was scheduled for Monday. The suspect, Joseph Druce, 37, was serving a life sentence for a 1988 murder.

Conte said Druce will be charged with murder. Department of Correction spokeswoman Kelly Nantel said Druce was placed in isolation after the killing, and that the department had begun an internal investigation of Geoghan's death. ROBERT O'NEILL (AP)

Tribes Big Donors in Calif. Recall Race

LOS ANGELES | California's politically powerful Indian tribes are poised to play a key role in the campaign to recall Democratic Gov. Gray Davis, and they have much to gain from the outcome.

Whoever occupies the governor's office after the Oct. 7 vote will largely determine how much gambling will expand in California, as well as whether tribal casinos will be asked to fork over more money to the state.

The tribes are expected to give heavily during the remaining six weeks of the campaign.

Some tribes see an opportunity with the candidacy of Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante, a Democrat who has been one of their top allies in Sacramento for a decade.

Tribal officials also say they have contacted Republican front-runner Arnold Schwarzenegger.

Schwarzenegger and Bustamante had been neck-and-neck in polls, though a Los Angeles Times poll released late Saturday showed Bustamante ahead, 35 percent to 22 percent with a margin of error of 3 percentage points.

Autistic Boy Dies In Prayer Service

MILWAUKEE | An autistic 8-year-old boy died while being restrained during a church prayer service held in an attempt to cure him, and one man connected with the small storefront church was arrested, police and a church official said Sunday.

Several members of the Faith Temple Church of the Apostolic Faith prayed over him for more than an hour until someone noticed he wasn't moving and called paramedics.

"The boy just had a problem in his mind, and what we were doing was asking God to fix it," Bishop David Hemphill Sr. said. "He chose to fix it by taking him back home to him."

Police would not say what the man could be charged with, only that they were awaiting the results of an autopsy. (AP)

Families Dismiss Drug Link

Relatives say victims of W.Va. sniper did not use narcotics

CAMPBELLS CREEK, W.VA. | The three victims in the recent spate of sniper-style shootings had different backgrounds, different hopes for the future. But all were killed in the same way, each shot once with the same .22-caliber gun while standing outside convenience stores in the Charleston area.

Sheriff David Tucker has suggested drugs as a possible motive in the killings of Jeanie Patton, 31, and Okey Meadows Jr., 26.

Both lived in Campbells Creek, an area residents say is rife with drugs.

But family members and friends of the victims defend them against the insinuation. Drugs haven't been mentioned in connection with the other victim, Gary Carrier Jr., 44, and Charleston Police Chief Jerry Pauley has said police had found no drug connections to him.

Authorities on Sunday were still searching for at least two men — a heavysset, goateed man believed to have been in a dark-colored Ford F-150 pickup and a man with "skinny white legs" who is considered a possible witness. JOEDY MCCREARY (AP)

More Than 1,000 Artifacts Missing From Museum

DAYTON, OHIO | A 2002 audit of the world's oldest and largest military aviation museum found 1,000 artifacts were missing — from NASA and Wright brothers technology to a variety of military weapons.

Among the missing items are three bombs, several guns, a lens from the Gemini 5 space mission and the wooden pattern used to cast the engine that enabled Wilbur and Orville Wright to achieve the first powered flight in 1903.

The audit of the U.S. Air Force Museum, at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, named former chief of collections, Scott A. Ferguson, as the person most responsible for the museum's artifacts. Ferguson's attorney, Larry Greger, declined to comment Sunday. (AP)

Court to Examine Miranda Warnings

Cases center on when and how police affirm a suspect's rights

WASHINGTON | "You have the right to remain silent" will be a common utterance around the Supreme Court this fall.

Justices will hear appeals in three cases involving the court's 37-year-old mandate that police officers warn suspects of their rights before beginning interrogations.

The eventual rulings will tell police how far they can go to get answers from suspected criminals and let courts know when they must bar confessions or evidence from a trial.

Officers hoping to enhance their chances of getting a suspect to divulge key information sometimes put off reading "Miranda warnings." After they get a confession, or answers that will lead to a weapon or other evidence, officers then run through the warnings that have been made famous by TV cop shows.

The Supreme Court will decide if it's smart detective work or deceitful trickery to delay the warning.

GINA HOLLAND (AP)

REMAINING SILENT?

The Supreme Court will review three Miranda cases during its upcoming term:

- Missouri v. Seibert: Whether police can question a suspect before as well as after reading their Miranda rights.
- Fellers v. United States: Can questioning before rights are read taint an interview afterward?
- United States v. Patane: Do police always have to read suspects their Miranda rights before seizing evidence?

Ex-Iraqi Agents Seen Helping U.S.

Officials deflect rumors; top Shiite cleric's home bombed

BAGHDAD | Iraqi sources said Sunday U.S. authorities were recruiting key ex-members of Saddam Hussein's feared security service, working to expand intelligence gathering and root out the resistance that has attacked U.S. forces and now resorted to terror bombings.

The Iraqis, closely linked to the Mukhabarat service, spoke only on condition of anonymity. They said the U.S. recruitment of about 100 former intelligence higher-ups had been in progress for two weeks.

Gen. Richard Myers, the top U.S. military officer, told CBS News he was unaware of any recruitment of former Iraqi intelligence agents. However, he added: "That does not mean we do not want the Iraqi people to help. And it just has to be the right kind of Iraqi people helping," he told the TV network.

Also on Sunday, a bomb ripped through the home of one of Iraq's most important Shiite clerics in the Islamic holy city of Najaf, killing three guards and injuring family members, a member of the Iraqi Governing Council said.

Mohammed Saeed al-Hakim, in his late 60s, holds the highest theological title in Shiite Islam. He was detained by Iraqi authorities in the 1980s because of his opposition to and criticism of Saddam Hussein.

U.S. Pulls Back Troops in Liberia

MONROVIA, LIBERIA | A 150-strong Marine fighting force pulled back to warships off the coast of Liberia on Sunday, ending significant U.S. military deployment on the ground after just 11 days.

U.S. Marines insisted that American troops once back on the warships would be in a better position to respond to any flare-ups in Liberia, which is just one week into a peace accord meant to end 14 years of conflict that have claimed more than 150,000 lives.

But Liberians, watching U.S. military helicopters whir out of sight in the unannounced departure, spoke fearfully of being deserted.

Sunday's withdrawal leaves about 100 U.S. troops still on the ground — 70 guarding the U.S. Embassy, and 30 working as a liaison team with a 1,500-strong West African peace force, said a military spokesman. (AP)

Israel Steps Up Attacks on Hamas

4 killed after official says members are targets for 'liquidation'

GAZA CITY, GAZA | Israeli helicopters fired missiles at a group of armed men sitting near the Gaza City beach Sunday, killing four Hamas fighters, including a fugitive commander.

Israel's army chief said only hours earlier that all members of the Islamic militant group are "potential targets for liquidation." The attack occurred just yards from the office of Palestinian security chief Mohammed Dahlan.

A Palestinian man holds up the blood-stained shirt of one of the men.

Sunday's attack came three days after Israel killed Hamas leader Ismail Abu Shanab in a similar strike in retaliation for a Hamas bombing that killed 21 people on a Jerusalem bus.

Palestinian officials said Sunday's attack would undermine a planned Palestinian security clampdown that began Saturday with moves against arms smugglers, casting fresh doubt on an already shaky U.S.-backed peace plan. That so-called "road map" envisions a Palestinian state by 2005. IBRAHIM BARZAQ (AP)

Authorities have discovered a sus-

Afghan Security Woes Deepen

Five government soldiers killed in Taliban ambush

KABUL, AFGHANISTAN | Afghanistan's security woes deepened Sunday as officials said Taliban guerrillas attacked a truck carrying government soldiers in the south of the country, killing at least five.

The Taliban attack was the latest in a rash of assaults against government forces in the south and east. On Friday, hundreds of suspected Taliban guerrillas clashed with patrolling government forces in neighboring Uruzgan province, leaving at least eight dead on both sides after fighting that lasted nearly four hours.

The recent spike in violence comes amid reports that the Taliban are regrouping and staging attacks to undermine the administration of President Hamid Karzai. Karzai is strongly supported by the United States but has little effective control outside of Kabul.

Choppy Reception for Olympic Logo

BEIJING | If you think the people of China are afraid to express their opinions, look online and see how they are blasting the new logo for the 2008 summer Olympics.

"The figure looks so weak. The legs are soft and limp, like a eunuch trembling before his master," someone said recently on one of China's largest Internet portals.

But to the Chinese government that picked it and the International Olympics Committee that approved it, the design is an ingenious combination of Chinese culture and the Olympic spirit.

Just two days after the emblem's debut, as many as 14,000 people flooded the popular Sina.com Web site with their opinions. There are those who braved the avalanche of disgust to defend the figure.

"Some people will attack anything, as long as it's made in China," wrote someone called Sharp Knife Class President. CHING-CHING NI (LOS ANGELES TIMES)

BWI Growing Due to SW Partnership

LINTHICUM, MD. | The partnership between Baltimore-Washington International Airport and Southwest Airlines has transformed BWI into one of the nation's fastest-growing travel hubs.

Southwest will celebrate its 10th anniversary at BWI next month, having gone from eight flights per day from the airport in 1993 to 156 flights per day now.

Analysts credit the carrier with reversing a three-year decline in passenger numbers at BWI, which began in the early 1990s after a shake-up at USAirways. (AP)

Freedom Reigns Supreme

SOCCER | Abby Wambach scored the winning goal in the sixth minute of overtime — one minute after teammate Mia Hamm bounced a free kick off the crossbar — and the Washington Freedom beat the Atlanta Beat 2-1 in Sunday's Founders Cup. The game serves as the WUSA's championship.

Wambach, expected to be one of the core players of the U.S. national team in this decade, also scored in the seventh minute of regulation and was named the game's Most Valuable Player.

Hamm, who had won everything during her brilliant career except the Founders Cup, was poised to be the hero but her free kick from within the arc slammed off the crossbar.

Wambach was mobbed by her teammates after scoring the game-winning goal for the Freedom.

"We told ourselves in the huddle, 'We're not going to lose,'" Wambach said. BERNIE WILSON (AP)

Recent Injuries Could Help Redskins

Washington won't see QBs Pennington, Vick in first two games

PRO FOOTBALL | When Patrick Ramsey said the Washington Redskins caught "some really good breaks," he wasn't talking about the injuries to Chad Pennington and Michael Vick.

Even so, the misfortunes of the New York Jets and Atlanta Falcons could benefit Washington in coming weeks. Pennington broke his left wrist Saturday night and is out for 12 weeks, and Vick has a broken leg — sidelining the two quarterbacks the Redskins were to face in their first two regular-season games.

Instead, the Redskins will face 39-year-old Vinny Testaverde of the Jets and the Falcons' Doug Johnson, making the tough six-game run at the start just a little less daunting.

If the Redskins play the way they did in Saturday's 24-3 win over the Baltimore Ravens, it won't matter who the other quarterback is.

The starters played the first half and committed just two penalties and didn't have a turnover.

The middle of the defensive line played well, with Martin Chase, James Cannida and Peppi Zellner getting sacks.

Also, the offensive line didn't allow a sack.

The special teams even recovered a fumble. JOSEPH WHITE (AP)

? SINCE YOU ASKED

Q While I was refinancing my mortgage recently, my bank pulled credit scores from three sources. My "Fair Isaac" was 775 while my "Empirica" was 776. However, my "Beacon" was 608. Fortunately, this did not affect the rate I'm receiving, but I was surprised that there was such a discrepancy between Beacon and the other two. Do they each have their own formula for determining your score?

A All three credit bureaus use the FICO credit scoring formula created by Fair Isaac Corp. They just call it different things. At Equifax, it's the Beacon. At TransUnion, it's the Empirica. At Experian, it's called the "Experian/Fair, Isaac Risk Model."

The scores are based on your credit reports at each of the three bureaus. Because the bureaus are private companies that don't typically share data, your reports can be different at all three. Equifax probably has some negative information about you, such as late payments or a collection action, that the other two don't.

As you discovered, the effect of negative marks at just one bureau is minimal when getting a mortgage. That's because most home lenders focus on the middle of your three scores and disregard the other two. (If you're applying for a mortgage with another person, such as a spouse, they usually use the lower of the two middle scores.)

Where this negative information can hurt you is when you apply for credit from a lender that consults only one bureau — and it happens to be the bureau that has the bad marks.

Order your Equifax credit report at www.equifax.com and see exactly what the trouble is. If the report contains errors or entries that don't belong to you, ask Equifax to investigate and eliminate them. Once you've done that, check out your other two reports as well, just to make sure they're accurate. As a general rule, you should pull your reports at all three bureaus at least once a year, and again a few months before you apply for any major credit, such as a car loan or mortgage. At Any Rate

As interest rates rise, adjustable-rate loans may be better deals

MORTGAGES | With interest rates rising, many people think it's too late to get a good deal on a mortgage to buy new homes or refinance their current homes. But there are many alternatives in the market to the traditional fixed-rate, 30-year mortgage that are offered at manageable rates, including adjustable-rate mortgages.

After hitting a record low of 5.21 percent in mid-June, the average rate on 30-year mortgages has risen steadily to about 6.25 percent, according to the Freddie Mac mortgage company. That's not a bad rate by historical standards and well below the average 8 percent of just three years ago. But it's risen enough to scare many people away. The Mortgage Bankers Association of America said last week that mortgage applications declined for a second consecutive week to the lowest level in more than a year.

ond consecutive week to the lowest level in more than a year.

"What is going on now is 'sticker shock,' and that will continue for a couple of months," said A.W. Pickel of Lenexa, Kan., president of the National Association of Mortgage Brokers. "Then, I think, people will figure out that 6.25 percent is a pretty good interest rate — and that they have alternatives."

Bob Walters, chief economist at Quicken Loans in Livonia, Mich., said that as rates have risen, more customers are considering mortgages that have fixed rates for three, five or seven years and then are adjustable.

He said a couple taking a hybrid 5-1 mortgage of $200,000 at 5.25 percent instead of a fixed-rate, 30-year mortgage at 6.75 percent would save about $15,000 in the first five years. After that, the rate can be adjusted annually, but the increase is capped at a maximum of 2 percentage points a year and no more than 5 percentage points over the life of the loan.

David Lewis, executive vice president of the online bank ING Direct in Wilmington, Del., said people should consider matching the terms on their mortgages to the time they expect to stay in their houses. "The average these days is seven years, and for many it's less than that."

Ryan Sysko, 29, refinanced his home in Wilmington seven months ago, changing from a 30-year, fixed-rate mortgage at about 8 percent to a 5-1 adjustable-rate mortgage from ING Direct with a starting rate of 4.875 percent.

Sysko, who works for an insurance marketing agency, said the adjustable-rate mortgage made sense for him and his wife, Leslie, because they don't plan to stay in their town home for longer than five years. "No one stays in the same home for 30 years," Sysko said. "Knowing that this wasn't going to be the house we stayed in forever, a long-term mortgage didn't make sense." EILEEN ALT POWELL (AP)

Premium Mend

INSURANCE | With the cost of auto and homeowners insurance rising rapidly, it's a good idea to review policies to see if there are ways to reduce premiums.

The average consumer will spend $855 on auto insurance this year, up about 18 percent since 2001, according to the Insurance Information Institute in New York. And consumers are expected to spend about $603 for homeowners insurance, up more than 17 percent in the past two years, the institute estimates.

The reasons for the premium increases range from higher medical costs for accident victims and more-costly car repairs on the auto side to an unusually high number of storms and the emergence of expensive mold claims on the homeowner's side.

Those facing increases in their premiums can take some steps to try to lower their costs, experts say.

Comparison shop. Premiums vary widely from company to company. One place to begin looking for companies and agents is www.naic.org.

Raise your deductible. When it comes to auto insurance, "you get the biggest bang from raising your deductible," said Carolyn Gorman of the Insurance Information Institute (www.insurance.info). Gorman said increasing the deductible to $500 from $200 on an auto policy will reduce the cost of collision and comprehensive coverage by 15 percent to 30 percent.

Don't be petty. Higher deductibles work for homeowners insurance, too, said Alan Snyder, chief executive of Answer Financial Inc. in Los Angeles. "Most people, if they have a small claim, don't file it," he said. "They're right. It will make the premium go up." The company's Web site at www.answerfinancial.com has calculators that let insurance shoppers plug in different deductibles to see the impact on premiums.

Look for discounts. Some auto insurance companies also give discounts, which can lower costs even more. Many companies will give consumers a discount if they buy both auto and homeowners coverage from the same company. Ask about possible discounts if you haven't had an accident or moving violation in the past three years, if you have taken a defensive driving course, or if you've installed anti-theft devices in your car. Look for discounts for homeowners insurance as well. Home security systems often earn price breaks, for example.

Know they're watching. Home buyers should be aware that insurance companies are keeping a closer watch on the number of claims filed on a particular property — and raising premiums accordingly. Consumers can check the so-called CLUE score, or Comprehensive Loss Underwriting Exchange score, for a primary residence for a fee of $12.95 at www.choicetrust.com.

Your Boss's Bosses

Middle managers are reporting to multiple layers of supervisors

TREND | At a time when managers have to deal with a shortage of underlings, they also find themselves taking orders from a plethora of bosses.

Financial managers who used to report only to the heads of their business units now have to include chief financial officers who want to closely monitor accounting practices. Many product-development, marketing and sales managers must answer to the executive in charge of their particular business plus the heads of several geographic regions. And technology managers must satisfy the demands of multiple executives, plus their companies' chief technology officers.

This so-called matrix organization was designed to help avoid various corporate problems by increasing oversight, to foster teamwork among employees of different specialties and to create more-innovative products and services by widening the field of input.

It has become prevalent especially at companies where slow growth over the past two years has meant senior executives aren't getting promotions to new posts. Instead, the top talent gets extra duties to stay challenged.

But too many bosses can slow decision-making and deprive underlings of a sense of ownership of their work. And if bosses dislike each other, subordinates end up pulled in two directions. Even when bosses get along, maneuvering in a matrix organization requires considerable management savvy and communication skill.

Shrinking staffs only compound the difficulties of a multiplication of bosses. "Most companies no longer have assistants or other liaisons who used to smooth things out and make sure everyone could meet on a certain day," says Dee Soder, head of the CEO Perspective Group, a New York consulting firm.

As a result, some managers who report to more than one boss are saddled with more work coordinating meetings and assignments, which increases their already heavy workloads.

Even managers who report to just one boss find themselves being instructed or second-guessed by other top executives who have been told to exert their influence through the ranks.

At one communications company, a middle manager says he now entertains suggestions about his work from three executives in addition to his immediate boss, even though two of his eight staffers have been laid off. CAROL HYMOWITZ (WSJ)

BY THE NUMBERS: In a poll by market research firm InsightExpress, more than 60 percent of those surveyed said the federal Do Not Call list ought to be expanded to encompass religious and political organizations.

LIFE AT WORK

Live Online

AMY JOYCE's column appears Sundays in The Washington Post. She chats every Tuesday at 11 a.m. on washingtonpost.com/liveonline.

I have a manager who's difficult in many ways, but one of the worst is that she's really moody. Is there a way I can say, "Snap out of it" without sounding like a smart aleck?

I don't know that there is an appropriate way to tell a boss (or any co-worker) to snap out of it. You can ask her if there's anything wrong, and note that she seems down lately. That may clue her in that her moods are affecting others.

Oh, where have all the bosses gone?

Is there any way to report rampant absenteeism of senior staff members? I have e-mails that prove they work less than 20-hour weeks while the rest of us peons work 40-plus. I find this unfair since they earn up to three times my salary.

Is it affecting your work directly? If not, why do you care, really? You don't know what they are doing in the time you don't see them. And I am sure people are aware of their work habits. You complain, you look like a complainer who wastes work time on documenting what other people do. Blech.

Is there any good way to tell your bosses that they have been hiring some real losers and it is bringing everyone down?

Short answer: no. Your boss hires people for a reason, and you have no control over that. What you do have control over is helping to nudge them in the right direction when they get there.

I'm a new hire at a great company. Everyone here has been very nice and welcoming. Except for the guy who fixes our computers. He is extremely nice and friendly to everyone else here. He's not outright rude to me, but I can sense hostility. He's constantly talking on his cell phone about things that have nothing to do with his job — and he does it in my cube! I want to scream. Am I overreacting?

How about you ask him not to talk on his cell in your cube. You're trying to do work here. If he fixes your computer when you ask, be happy. You don't have to be best buds.

'Fight Club' author spills Portland's eccentric secrets

BOOKS | The guy wandering around outside the tiki bar can't even pay for a clue, he's so lost.

"Does anybody know the area?" he asks.

Nobody knows the area better than Chuck Palahniuk, author of the cult classic "Fight Club." And Palahniuk has written a book to prove it.

"Fugitives and Refugees: A Walk in Portland, Oregon" is stuffed with juxtapositions and secrets, from Chamber of Commerce sound bites to Portland's wildly kinky underground sex industry.

"The idea was to present the banal next to the spectacular," Palahniuk says over coffee at the Alibi, the Polynesian paradise that leads off the book's list of recommended eateries in town.

The stars of the book are the fugitives and refugees who have flocked to one of the West Coast's loosest cities over the years, eccentrics all. So we meet Francis Gabe, an 87-year-old who lives alone in the "world-famous Self-Cleaning House," in a Portland suburb.

Then there's the couple who founded the local ghost-hunters group, who say Portland is especially receptive to ghosts.

Palahniuk says he knows that telling Portland's secrets to anyone with $16 does dilute the myth. "That is always the tragedy," he said. "But the alternative is not to acknowledge these fantastic things."

And there are some quintessentially Portland people and places in the book, like the woman who will teach your dog to dance to the strains of "I Fought the Law."

In the end, the book is a twisted Valentine to Portland, a celebration of a slacker culture in which, Palahniuk said, "It's OK to work a cruddy job as long as you maintain the world's largest collage of Elvis pictures."

"Or something like that."

McCoury is patriarch of the Del McCoury Band, a five-piece group that performs old-time bluegrass in suits and ties, much as McCoury did 40 years ago with Bill Monroe's Blue Grass Boys.

grass's intricacy and improvisation. Leftover Salmon, String Cheese Incident and Phish are among the groups that have performed or recorded with McCoury, giving him broader exposure than most bluegrass outfits.

"Over the last five years we've played things I never thought we'd play as a bluegrass band," said McCoury.

The band continues to record — "It's Just the Night" was released on Aug. 12 — and play traditional bluegrass festivals. Last year, it was part of the successful Down From the Mountain tour, a celebration of old-style acoustic music with artists such as Ralph Stanley, Emmylou Harris and Alison Krauss.

On stage, McCoury has a quirky presence, grinning and twitching his bushy gray eyebrows as he sings in his high lonesome tenor. The band doesn't use a playlist, so every show is different.

"We just get up there and pick and, you know, kind of feel the audience out," McCoury said. "We just do what they tell us to do."

Aerosmith Is Playing The Blues

MUSIC | The summer has seen some erratic box-office numbers for rock tours. But the home-run ball has been the Aerosmith/Kiss bill, which has been packing them in.

"It's been great," said Steven Tyler of Aerosmith. "The worst we did was 3,000 short of a sellout one night."

Aerosmith and Kiss also once toured together in the '70s.

Aerosmith is headlining the tour, and one demand that Tyler made was to have a ramp built into the audience. "So if you have [lousy] seats in the 100th row, I'm still in your face."

The band has been recording a blues album tentatively titled "Honkin' on Bobo" that will come out early next year.

"We do a couple of songs by Sonny Boy Williamson, and Dylan's 'Broke Down Engine,'" Tyler said of the blues set.

The National Football League recruited Aerosmith for a performance at the Mall Sept. 4 to celebrate the start of the football season. Sharing the bill are Aretha Franklin, Britney Spears and Mary J. Blige.

And in case you didn't know, Tyler is a doctor these days, having received an honorary doctorate from the Berklee College of Music this spring. An ensemble played a bunch of Aerosmith songs in his honor. "I'd even release it as a CD," said Tyler. "The Berklee kids really did the music well."

Shears and A Friendly Set of Ears

OUTREACH | Bruised and fearful women sit in the chairs of hair salons and, in the time it takes for a shampoo, cut and perm, spill the whole story: Their men beat them, but they'd fear for their lives if they tried to leave.

"They just want to talk," said Linda Franklin, co-owner of Bee Jay's Merle Norman Hair Salon in Tappahannock, Va.

"And it ranges from teenagers on up," added her business partner and fellow coiffeuse, Janet Sanders.

Briefly away from their tormentors and in the company of women they trust, some battered women regard hairdressers' shops as one of the few refuges where they can speak freely of the savagery they endure at home.

Virginia Attorney General Jerry W. Kilgore walked into Bee Jay's recently and sold Franklin, Sanders and fellow stylist Dena Hudson on a new state initiative to teach beauticians how to respond when they suspect a client suffers from domestic violence.

Kilgore, a Republican, is traveling Virginia in the ebbing days of summer to discuss his new program, "Cut Out Domestic Violence."

Regional training sessions begin in October for hairdressers, hair colorists, cosmetologists, manicurists, tanning bed operators and others who might spot domestic abuse.

At the First Impressions Hair and Tanning Salon in Warsaw, the owner and lone stylist, Tracy Smith, told Kilgore that she hears chilling stories about the beatings some of her clients suffer.

"You're taken off-guard when someone reveals something that personal to you," Smith said.

At Bee Jay's, Dena Hudson put it this way: "I think they're looking for validation, just somebody to say you don't deserve to be treated that way."

Every now and then, the stylists see some women break away from men who beat them. Others remain with their abusers.

And still others, they said, just drop out of sight. BOB LEWIS (AP)

Elijah Muldrow flies toward the basket in his attempt to win last week's slam-dunk competition at Ruckers Park in Harlem, New York, a mecca for streetball stars.

Superior Courts

In Harlem's Rucker Park, crowds roar and hoop dreams soar as street stars square off

SPORTS | It was the type of play that makes jaws drop.

As the point guard brought the ball up the court, he did a mean crossover, then whipped it behind his back to the small forward out on the flat, who gunned it to the off guard on the edge of the key, who touch-passed it to a wide-open power forward under the basket.

The finale: an earth-rattling two-handed dunk.

This isn't the NBA or even the NCAA. It's Harlem's Rucker Park, legendary home to New York's great streetball tournament.

"When you get off that A train at Rucker Park, you better bring your A game," game announcer EJ the Mayor said during a break in play last week.

Street basketball players have traditionally been the stuff of urban legend — amazing small crowds at asphalt courts in cities across the country, but unseen and unknown by most. That's changing now, as the exploits of these raw talents catch the attention of TV and music executives, writers and entrepreneurs.

The summer league at Rucker — started in 1956 by Parks Department worker Holcombe Rucker — is the center of it all.

After almost dying away in the early 1980s, the Rucker league has experienced a resurgence, drawing the interest of rappers like Jay-Z and Fat Joe, who sponsor teams, as well as the National Basketball Association, which broadcasts games on its cable channel.

The annual tournament, now called the Entertainer's Basketball Classic, is the subject of an MTV reality show called "Harlem Hoops." Its history is detailed in the new book, "Asphalt Gods: An Oral History of the Rucker Tournament," by Vincent Mallozzi, a New York Times sports editor.

Residents say summer doesn't truly start at the park — in the middle of the Polo Grounds Housing Project and across the Harlem River from Yankee Stadium — without the ping of a bouncing ball and the squeak of sneakers.

With such talent, the quality of the game is top-notch. That cuts down on some of the truly outrageous schoolyard tricks one might see at other streetball exhibitions.

But Pee Wee Kirkland, one of the greats from the league's heyday in the early 1970s, says the game has suffered because of the premium put on embarrassing your opponent with high-wire acrobatics.

"Young players today are very much out of focus," Kirkland said. "It's all about the trick, and not the win. When we played ... we knew our fundamentals."

The new players say fundamentals are important — but so is fun. Point guard Sebastian "Too Fast, Too Furious" Telfair, 17, said he looked at the league as a place to be a little more free.

"It's supposed to be a little more fun here," he said. "But when you put me on a court I want to win, first and foremost." LUKAS I. ALPERT (AP)

TO THE EDITOR

I WAS APPALLED to read your article about Hamas leader Ismail Abu Shanab in Friday's paper. According to the article, "While he backed the Hamas position that there is no place for a Jewish state in the Middle East and that Israel must be destroyed, he was one of the group's more sober minds."

According to his ideology, Israel doesn't have a right to exist, and yet you portray him as a moderate political leader. The blood of 20 innocent Israelis from his latest massacre isn't dry yet, but reading about him, I could almost see a halo grow around his head.

There is no such thing as a political leader of a terrorist group. A terrorist group, by definition, commits terror act for which all members are responsible — especially those who masterminded them.

I COULDN'T BELIEVE how many people wrote about wearing flip-flops on the Metro. What bothers me are the people who paint their nails, apply foundation, clip their nails (and allow them to fly all over the place) and eat, when you know the sign says eating isn't allowed.

POST-WAR IRAQ

Live Online

From washingtonpost.com/liveonline

Author and former CIA agent ROBERT BAER was online Friday to discuss parallels between recent attacks in Baghdad and the 1983 attack on a U.S. Marine barracks in Beirut.

I am not a foreign affairs expert, but even I could foretell the problems of sabotage and guerrilla attacks in "post-war" Iraq that our soldiers are currently experiencing. Why then is our leadership acting surprised at these developments?

Yes, it was a mistake not to prepare for a Beirut-like situation. One thing I am certain of is that our military should not be policing Iraq or fighting a terrorist war there. No matter how many troops we send to Iraq, we'll never be able to do it. What we need to do is identify legitimate Iraqi leaders and turn security over to them — and back out of the country.

I don't mean this question to be disrespectful, but ... aren't the developments in Iraq in the last three months, from the failure to find weapons (the entire underpinning of the war) to the hapless condition we find ourselves in, evidence of gross malfeasance by this administration? And, if so, why do polls still suggest such (pretty) strong support of the president? Isn't this a failure of historic proportions?

I agree completely. (By the way, my sense always was that we should have found an Iraqi general to do the job — anything to keep our troops out of the Middle East.) The problem was that this war was concocted in Washington think tanks by people who haven't spent time in the Middle East. As for the average American, as much as I can tell, he or she was shocked by 9/11. And in times of crisis, people tend to defer to the White House, in spite of the evidence. If Iraq spins out of control, I think we'll see the polls change.

Cash's Comeback

Thursday's MTV Video Music Awards, celebrating a medium that usually oozes youth and invincibility, would seem like the last place to celebrate a somber video with a frail, 71-year-old JOHNNY CASH. Yet the extraordinary clip for "Hurt" is up for six awards, making Cash third only to Missy Elliott and Justin Timberlake in nominations. The music legend is working with doctors in hopes of attending the show. (AP)

Angelina Calls for Help To Aid Stranded Refugees

ANGELINA JOLIE concluded her visit Sunday to the war-torn border areas of Russia and Chechnya. Jolie, in Russia as a goodwill ambassador for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, said that she was concerned about the fate of the Chechen refugees currently living in the giant Bella tent camp in Ingushetia. Chechnya's prime minister said last week the camps will be closed by Oct. 1. Many people, including Jolie, fear refugees are being forced to return against their will. (AP)

Stupid Human Tricks

For his latest trick, magician DAVID BLAINE will try to live without food in a plastic box suspended high over London. Starting Sept. 5, Blaine will live in a plastic box for 44 days without food or human contact; he'll have only a tube for water and a tube for urine. (AP)

Floetry, Missy Elliott Top Soul Train Awards

Neo-soul duo FLOETRY, rapper Missy "Misdemeanor" Elliott and R&B newcomer Heather Headley took home the most awards at the 2003 Soul Train Lady of Soul Awards. Floetry was honored for best single by a group, "Say Yes," and best album by a group for "Floetic," as well as best new group. Elliott won twice, in best song of the year and best music video for the raunchy "Work It." Headley's "He Is" won her honors as best new solo artist, and her album "This Is Who I Am" was named the best solo effort of the year. (AP)

The ladies of Floetry accept one of three Soul Train awards they won.

WHO KNEW? Rap superstar Eminem starred alongside Vanilla Ice, Ja Rule and Pras in "Da Hip Hop Witch" in 2000 — a poorly received spoof of "Blair Witch Project." (WENN)
